Precious Metals

Gold prices inched lower amidst ambiguity regarding US and Iran peace deal and as rate hike expectations increased post the Fed policy meeting yesterday. Signing of an interim U.S.-Iran peace agreement helped improve market confidence and reduce fears of a prolonged energy supply disruption. The 14-point memorandum initiates a 60-day negotiation period under which Iran will allow toll-free transit through the Strait of Hormuz, with shipping activity expected to gradually return to full capacity within the next month. The agreement has eased concerns over an extended oil supply shock and helped stabilize inflation expectations, offering support to bullion after weeks of pressure from energy-driven price concerns. However, gains in gold remained limited after the Federal Reserve kept interest rates unchanged at 3.50%-3.75% and maintained a cautious stance on inflation. In its updated projections, Fed signaled that policymakers still see scope for further tightening, with nearly half of officials expecting at least one additional rate increase in 2026. In his first policy meeting as Fed Chair, Kevin Warsh reiterated the central bank's commitment to restoring price stability and indicated that inflation risks remain elevated despite recent improvements in energy markets. The Fed also revised its inflation forecasts higher, supporting dollar index, US Yields. Market participants will now monitor progress of U.S.-Iran negotiations during the 60-day window, along with upcoming economic data and Fed commentary, for further direction on inflation and interest rate expectations.

Aluminium climb spurred a partial recovery from the steep drop in prices at the start of week, when a U.S.-Iran peace agreement eased supply fears. The metal had slumped to a 2-1/2-month in the previous session, when details of the U.S.-Iran memorandum to end the war in the Middle East began to emerge. The conflict forced several smelters in the Gulf region, which accounts for around 9% of global aluminium capacity, to cut production and disrupted shipping, propelling aluminium prices to a four-year high earlier this month. Aluminium stocks in LME warehouses are at 316,525 tons, lowest since September 2022. China's top copper producers are seeking to add new members to an industry price-setting group, four sources with knowledge of the matter said, in a bid to strengthen their position in negotiations with miners over raw material supply. Miners usually pay treatment and refining charges (TC/RCs) to smelters to process their ore into refined metal. However, due to a shortage of concentrate supply, spot TC/RCs have been deep in negative territory for months, leaving smelters effectively having to pay to process material, relying on sales of byproduct sulphuric acid to make money. TC/RCs typically fall when concentrate supply is tight and rise when ore availability improves. China's refined copper output grew 7.4% between January and April 2026 from the same period of last year, according to the latest data from the National Bureau of Statistics.

Energy

Crude oil prices remained under pressure after the U.S. and Iran signed an interim peace agreement that paves the way for the reopening of the Strait of Hormuz and gradual return of Iranian oil exports. IEA warned that the current supply crisis could eventually turn into a significant surplus in 2027, forecasting global supply to exceed demand by 5.05 mbpd as Gulf production normalizes. However, losses were partly cushioned by a sharp draw in U.S. crude inventories, which fell for a tenth consecutive week to lowest level in over 40 years. Going forward, markets will closely monitor implementation of the U.S.-Iran agreement, inventory trends, and global demand conditions for further direction. Natural gas prices declined as forecasts for cooler weather and weaker power-sector demand offset support from strong spot market activity. Robust production near 110 Bcf/d and expectations of another near-average storage injection reinforced perceptions of a well-supplied market. However, losses may remain limited as rising LNG feedgas demand and expanding U.S. export capacity continue to support a constructive outlook.
